APPROPRIATION BILL PASSED OVER MAYOR

High Finance Explained By Supervisor Logan

The Logan appropriation bill passed third reading at the meeting of the Board of Supervisors, but only after strenuous objections on the part of the Democrats, who wanted to know what sense there could possibly be in passing a bill which was known to be considerably off in its estimates. Logan, Quinn and Aylett qualified as high finance experts, explaining things to the Mayor and McClellan, but with no effect, and the bill finally had to pass over the Mayor's head. In connection with this matter Logan made some mysterious hints, which sounded much like a threat, to the effect that if the Mayor kept on refusing to act there would soon be something doing.

The Kapiolani Estate wrote through John H. Colburn stating that while the building committee had reported that the McIntyre building was the only suitable one to be found for County offices, the Kapiolani building had excellent accommodations, which were available at much cheaper rates. Colburn's letter ended as follows:

"We therefore respectfully protest against your Honorable Board incurring the proposed expenses for City and County offices in the McIntyre building, at least until we shall have had an opportunity to show your Board, or a committee thereof, what we have to offer in that line; and we request that such opportunity be given us, and that our offer be thereafter impartially considered by your Honorable Board."

McClellan said that he had looked into the Kapiolani building, as well as the old Bulletin building on Merchant street, and had found that the assembly hall in the former was too noisy. Quinn clinched the matter by saying that it was no use discussing it, as the Board had already leased its present rooms and could not change, even if it wanted to.

Logan said that some items had been omitted from the appropriation bill. He moved a resolution covering the following additional items:

Hawaiian Interpreter, $100 a month. Portuguese Interpreter, $75 a month. Japanese Interpreter, $75 a month. Chinese Interpreter, $75 a month. Office detailed to City and County Attorney $100 a month.

These items total $2250 for the six months' period.

Logan moved to pass the resolution, but Fern ruled it out of order.

"I can't understand why you refuse to put motions when you have the veto power," said Logan, who thereupon, after going through the usual stunt of calling for Fern's refusal thrice, called the vote himself, passing the resolution first reading, only McClellan voting in the negative.

The resolution passed second reading by title after a similar performance.

Logan moved to finally pass the main appropriation bill, and to present it to the Mayor for approval.

"This bill carries appropriations for one-quarter million dollars," said McClellan. "It seems to me this deserves more deliberations. We simply follow the old estimates, while we have done no investigation ourselves. This was based on a balance of $18,000, and I understand that it will reach a far smaller amount. I think we should place this in the hands of a special committee.

Quinn said it made no difference, since the money could not be spent, if it was not available. It did not affect the bill.

Logan said the bill was merely a basis, the actual finances being governed mainly by the monthly estimates. The bill saved great advertising expense. The Territorial Government had always overrun its expenses, though in this case Logan did not approve of it, as it put the power of spending the money in the hands of the executive. In this case the Board always had its hand on the purse-strings. "The bill is perfectly safe," he said. "It is only a rough estimate."

Fern said he understood that the balance left by the old Board was shy four to five thousand dollars. He believed in monthly and not six-monthly appropriations.

"The Board has taken the matter in its own hands, appropriating $250,000," said Fern, "and still we don't know if we are going to get the $18,000 in January, so I myself think that the bill should be referred to a committee, or if the majority does not see fit to do so, I shall overrule the motion."

Logan said that the report of the balance's being reduced was exaggerated, and repeated his statement as to the virtues of the bill.

"I would press my motion," he said. "Since you have the power to veto it." Aylett cut in, quoting law, stating that the matter could not be referred to a committee. The bill should either be amended or passed as a whole. The motion to pass was in order.

"The bill is not in the proper form," said Fern. "I maintain that it is out of order."

"May I ask what is the matter with the form?" asked Logan. "We had legal advice on it."

"The workings of this Board are out of order, and have been from the beginning," said Fern. "When the Board began to pass things over the Mayor's head it was out of order, and this bill is no also."

"You admit right now that you will accept nothing which the Board takes up," said Aylett. "Will you admit that?"

"The Board can pass this over my head," retorted Fern. Aylett brought up a matter of mule feed which had been up before the Roads and Bridges Committee.

"There was not a chairman of Roads and Bridges appointed legally," Aylett made a lengthy review of the situation, and Fern answered that he refused to recognize the motion.

"I hope that the issue between us, as you have squarely put us will soon be decided by the Courts," said Logan. "I can now see that it is coming soon."

If you only refuse enough and at the right time it will come very soon. The usual triple refusal play was gone through, and the bill was passed. The meeting adjourned until 7:30 to-morrow evening.
